Committee examines campaign dispute

By Meghan Johnson
college news editor

The Student Government Association's executive council has appointed an independent committee to investigate a political dispute that arose during the campaign for Chandler Hall SGA senator last week.

Dr. Lacy Daniel, the SGA's adviser, SGA President Kathy Walsh and Legislative Vice President Tracy Humphrey have appointed three JMU students to a committee that will investigate political bickering between two of the candidates and decide if their campaigns were conducted fairly.

Chairman Bob Brimmer said the committee held an organizational meeting Wednesday and decided it will hear the evidence next week. Lisa Briggs and Colleen McCracken also serve on the committee.

"We wanted to choose people that didn't have any kind of initial knowledge of [the case] and that we thought would be impartial," Walsh said.

Briggs served on the SGA election committee for the past two years, Walsh said. McCracken was a member of the finance committee last year. Brimmer, a graduate assistant, was president of his student government for two years during his undergraduate studies.

The dispute revolves around accusations from freshman Sven Johnson who was a candidate in the race. He claims some of the actions of senior Patricia Williams, who was elected to the office Sept. 20, violated election rules.

Another candidate, Mark Callis, requested an SGA investigation of the election after Johnson dropped out of the race shortly before the election.

Johnson claims Williams put up campaign posters a day early and unfairly obtained a list of Chandler residents from the Office of Residence Life. He also says she falsely claimed to have held a position in this fall's SGA book sale.

Williams put up her campaign posters Sept. 14, Johnson said. All the candidates in the hall elections had been told not to put up the posters until a day later.

City council postpones decision on townhouses

By Eric Fife
staff writer

The Harrisonburg City Council voted unanimously Tuesday night to table a proposal by DMI Corporation which would have allowed the construction of townhouses for JMU students.

DMI, which developed Hunters Ridge Student Condominiums, wanted to change the zoning of a 10.3 acre plot of land between Devonshire Village and Port Republic Road.

The rezoning would allow the construction of 100 four-person townhouses. Council members decided to allow time for further negotiations between DMI and Devonshire Village residents.

An additional 1.7 acre plot, owned by Robert and Joyce Jellum, adjoined the land being considered for rezoning but was not included in Tuesday night's request, said Dr. James Eby, a 17-year resident of the neighborhood and an associate professor at JMU.

Eby was the first of several citizens to voice objections Tuesday night to the developers' proposal. "We are not anti-student. We simply want to be able to continue our own lifestyles."

Another Devonshire resident, Kent Miller, said the disturbances are continuous. "I can hear noise every weekend. [JMU students] have no regard for other people's properties . . . [and] seem to have no regard for rules.

"We would need a Berlin wall to stop students from going through our properties," he added.

Steve Daniel read a statement prepared by a neighbor. Some residents don't call the police even when they are disturbed by students' parties because they "fear student reprisals." Residents are "concerned that such problems will drastically multiply" if the townhouses are constructed.

Henry Clark, a representative of DMI, showed a drawing of the proposed construction. The townhouses would be separated from Devonshire by high hills, providing a sight and sound barrier.

DMI should be trusted to build the project as they promised, Clark said. "When they say they will build a buffer zone, they will do it."

Sally Fulton, another Devonshire resident, said she and her neighbors have been negotiating with DMI for a written agreement that the proposed barriers will be built and maintained.

If the council agreed to DMI's proposal, she argued, the residents' group would lose their power to negotiate for the barriers.

In tabling the proposal, Clark said, the council set a "very dangerous precedent" in supporting the Devonshire residents' request for written agreements.

But Williams said she did not put up posters Sept. 14. She posted small fliers in the dorm about 2 a.m. Sept. 15.

Chandler's hall director, Lisa Cacciapaglia, told her she could campaign as soon as she had filed her declaration of intent to run for the senate seat, Williams said. She asked Humphrey if this was correct and Humphrey told her she could put up posters no earlier than Sept. 15.

Cacciapaglia said the events of the campaign and election are "a blur" after all the confusion, and she may or may not have said that to Williams.

She said she has tried to remain unbiased during the dispute.

Callis said he understood posters could be put up only after all declarations of intent had been filed in the SGA office. The last day to file declarations was Sept. 15.

Johnson also claims that Williams obtained a list of students living in Chandler Hall from the Office of Residence Life. He said the list contained Social Security numbers and birthdates, information protected by the federal Privacy Act.

Williams said she called the residence life office to ask if she could see a list of Chandler Hall residents and their post office box numbers so she could mail campaign letters.

Williams said the person who answered the phone said she could pick up a photocopy of the list at the residence life office in Alumnae Hall. Later the person called Williams back and said she couldn't copy the list for her because the copying room was locked, but that Williams could make a copy and return it to the office.

But Williams said Johnson also had a copy of the same list, which he obtained from the Chandler Hall office.

Cacciapaglia said he had permission to use the list.

"He was allowed to use the list under my supervision in the office," she said. She said she witnessed that he didn't copy any information other than names and box numbers.

Williams said when she learned the list had been mistakenly given to her, she talked to Phil Riordan, assistant director of residence life for the Lake Area, and returned her copy of the list to him.

Riordan confirmed that Williams returned the copy and said it wasn't a problem for his office.

Dr. William Bolding, director of residence life, said a student employee "unknowingly" gave out the list. He said it's against the Office of Residence Life's policy to release any student information without a request from JMU's Office of Student Activities.

"Although I think it's important to... get to the bottom of the matter... the student government... is not a vehicle to be used for personal or political gains."

—Kathy Walsh

Johnson also claims Williams falsely used the title "co-chairman of the SGA book sale" on her campaign literature. He said he thought her title was "financial secretary."

Williams said she was appointed last spring by Patricia McCloskey, the book sale chairman, to be a supervisor at the sale this fall. But when she returned to JMU this fall, McCloskey asked her to be the financial secretary, a position which requires maintaining records and making deposits, among other duties.

Williams said during the sale she helped with much of the chairman's work, including opening and closing the sale several times. She said McCloskey didn't have a problem with Williams' using the title of co-chairman.

"It was fine with me," McCloskey said. "She had done a lot of work to help me."

Tracy Selph, a supervisor at the sale, said Williams did work hard at the sale.

"She did an extreme amount. Every time I was there, she was there," she said. "She did the work and that should speak for itself."

Williams also said SGA president Kathy Walsh told her twice that she could use the title.

Johnson said the SGA executive council voted Sept. 19 that Williams could not use the title on her campaign materials. But, he added, Humphrey later told Williams that she could use it.

Humphrey said she couldn't comment on the executive council vote.

"My question is, is ignorance a defense here?"

But there are no written rules for minor elections, Williams said. Last year the election rules were "left up to the hall director."

Selph, who is also an SGA senator from White Hall, agreed.

"There were no written rules," she said. "The only written rules were [that] you have to be in good standing academically and have your declaration of intent turned in on time," she said.

The SGA constitution states a candidate for senate also must be a full-time student, Selph added.

"The election laws should be written down so that an unfortunate incident like this won't happen again," she said. "A student with good intentions may get caught in the crossfire."

Johnson dropped out of the race Sept. 18 following a candidate speak out in the dorm.

Callis appealed the vote count that elected Williams. He said he wonders if William's alleged actions could have influenced the race.

No one wants to admit that there might have been wrongdoing during the campaign, Callis said. "I don't think anything's going to be done," he said. "People are almost afraid to have a new election."

"The legislative vice president has power over all minor elections," Callis said. "She has the power to overlook discrepancies if she wants to."

"It seems to me that the minor elections need to be taken more seriously," he said.

Phone scheduling to debut in November

By Linda Brainin
staff writer

When registration week for the spring semester of 1989 at JMU rolls around in November, the horde of nervous and impatient students trying to get their classes won't be waiting in line.

They'll be in their dorm rooms, apartments or anywhere they can find a touchtone phone. After two years of development, the new touchtone registration system has arrived.

John Meck, manager of systems development for JMU's Office of Information Technology, said the system is part of a five-year plan developed in 1985 by JMU President Ronald Carrier.

Under the new system, each student will be assigned a registration time according to credit hours earned and the last four digits of the student's social security number. To register during the assigned time, a student can dial the system's phone number from any touchtone phone on or off campus.

All callers will be held on one of the system's 18 phone lines and will be allowed to register in the order they are connected.

The registration steps will be listed in the Spring 1989 Schedule of Classes.

Sherry Hood, assistant director of records, said the registration system turns a touchtone phone into a computer terminal. "Each key will have a meaning."

She stressed the importance of students being prepared to register. "It is very important that students read the information in the schedule of classes because it will have instructions on using the system."

During each registration call, the computer will monitor the line for inactivity. After the time limit runs out, the call will be disconnected.

Hood said students will have to "really listen" since

Governments must work together to stop drug abuse

By Cathy Carey
managing editor

Americans do not use drugs just because Latin America produces them, the cultural attache of the Colombian Embassy said Monday afternoon.

Instead, they are produced because Americans use them, Oscar Mejia said during the International Culture Week panel discussion on "Cocaine, Politics and the Economy."

"Let us not become involved in a debate over which came first, the consumption or the production of narcotics," he said. "Let us try to understand where the cause and effect lie, and that the problem of consumption contains a series of connotations which raise questions about the basis of the American way of life."

He said trying to solve the problem by stressing the eradication of Latin America's production will fail and that Latin America could be destroyed in this attempt.

"But so long as consumption here continues, so long as America fails to wipe out its excesses, production will rise again in some other parts of the world," he said.

He added that drug addiction can be stopped only if today's youth are capable of leading an "ethical revolution," which would stop drug addiction's causes as well as drug use.

Mejia said the drug problem is rooted in America's loss of traditional values.

"Without solid historical, cultural and ethical values, the individual has to confront the pressures of modern life, which puts immediate pleasure and production end of the drug problem.

According to a report on the Colombian fight against drugs presented by Colombian First Premier Minister Luis Guillermo Velez, the Colombian government has seized 14,948 kilograms of cocaine and destroyed 681 drug laboratories so far. He added the Colombian government traffickers and communist guerrillas in Colombia is a "marriage of convenience." The drug traffickers, who are capitalist "robber barons" trying to preserve their monetary gains, need the guerrillas, whose goal is to overthrow the Colombian government, because many of them operate from the guerrilla-controlled jungles. They contracted the communists to kill 12 Colombian Supreme Court Justices, he said.

He quoted one U.S. official as saying, "Our cooperation with Colombia . . . is succeeding in a number of areas, but our mutual efforts are being challenged by the best equipped, best financed and the most violent traffickers in the world."

Velez said the government has had to enlist its military in the fight against drug production because the drug lords are so powerful they are threatening the country's national security.

Silva said Charles Rangel, chairman of the House Select Committee on Narcotics, stated, "Traffickers threaten the national security of all nations in the hemisphere. It is time . . . to develop a plan . . . to work together to fight the common menace."

Silva said, "We have to win this war."

well-being over all the other aspects of his existence.

"Drugs are the consequence of the structural dysfunction of contemporary society, and to disregard this certitude is to close the door to any solution which tries to deal with the problem," he said.

Colombian First Secretary Hernan Silva said his country is fighting the

But Silva said his government has had trouble completely wiping out drug production because many drug sites located in the jungle are protected by heavily armed traffickers and sometimes by communist groups.

Car stereos taken; $1,200 loss reported

By Dale Harter
police reporter

Car stereo equipment and other items valued at more than $1,200 were stolen from cars parked in Z-Lot between Sept. 18 and Sept. 25, campus police said.

A Kraco digital cassette stereo valued at $150, a Kraco equalizer valued at $150, and a cassette tape valued at $11 reportedly were stolen from a 1978 Volkswagen Scirocco between 11 p.m. Sept. 18 and 10:45 p.m. Sept. 22, police said. The owner said the car was locked when he left it but unlocked when he returned and discovered the theft.

In the largest theft, a Sony CD player valued at $600 and a Sony cassette player valued at $200 were stolen from a Pontiac Firebird between Sept. 22 and Sept. 25.

A Sanyo cassette stereo valued at $100 reportedly was stolen from a 1981 Honda between 10 p.m. Sept. 20 and 5 p.m. Sept. 22, police said.

Campus police discovered another theft after scaring away two suspects about 6:15 p.m. Sept. 21. A lock jack, a tool used to pry open car doors, was found on the hood of a 1981 Datsun. The driver's side door was ajar and the car's stereo knobs had been removed, police said.

A radar detector, thermos bottle, flashlight, five cassette tapes and pocket change, with a total value of $75, reportedly were taken.

Police saw two people standing near the car in the lower east end of the parking lot. One suspect drove away in another car. The other suspect walked away, but police reportedly saw him get into the first suspect's car.

Campus police also reported the following:

Disorderly conduct, assault and battery on a police officer and resisting arrest

Student Michael P. Burns, 21, of 5685-A Harpers Farm Road, Columbia, Md., was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct, assault and battery on a police officer, and resisting arrest at 3:30 p.m. Saturday on the service drive west of Godwin Hall, police said.

Just before halftime during Saturday's football game, a police officer allegedly saw Burns beating his fists against the tennis court fence and shouting obscenities.

When the officer approached him and called out, Burns reportedly did not acknowledge him, police said. The officer reportedly smelled alcohol on Burns and placed him under arrest.

Burns reportedly threatened to kill the officer and became extremely violent. Five more officers and several cadets helped to subdue and handcuff him.

Driving under the Influence

Student Thomas R. Carnley, 21, of Rt. 1, Box 259, Goode, was arrested and charged with DUI about 2 a.m. Saturday on University Boulevard, police said.

Driving under the influence and refusal to take a breath or blood test Student Jack S. Demetris, Jr., 21, of 422 Mohnken Drive, Bridgewater, N.J., was arrested and charged with DUI and refusal to take a breath or blood test about 8:45 p.m. Friday on South Main Street, police said.

Drunk in public, underage consumption, personal abuse and noncompliance with an official request from a university official

A student was arrested and criminally charged with drunk in public and judicially charged with underage consumption, personal abuse and noncompliance at 1:40 a.m. Saturday beside the railroad tracks near Godwin tennis courts, police said.

Campus police initially observed the student staggering and falling in A-Lot. The student tried to run when police approached and became hostile when the arrest was being made, police said.

Petty larceny

● The "5" in the Channel 51 sign on the WVPT television station building reportedly was stolen sometime between Friday and Saturday, police said. The number, which was made of brushed aluminum, is valued at $125.

● A maroon motorcycle cover valued at $40 reportedly was stolen from under a tree behind Chandler Hall between 7 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m. Sunday, police said.

Destruction of state property

Student Michael William Smith, 19, of room C201C, Weaver Hall, has been charged with destruction of state property after he reportedly confessed to breaking three windows in the basement of Anthony-Seeger Hall.

The windows, valued at a total of $48, were broken about 3 a.m. Sunday, police said.

Smith was charged after campus police found blood on the broken windows and on the floor inside the building.

Dukakis

Loan plan lets grads repay percentage of income

[CPS] — Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis unveiled a plan Sept. 7 to let students repay their college loans at a rate that depends on how much they earn after they graduate.

The idea, which had been tried at a number of campuses, immediately drew mixed reviews.

Bruce Carnes, deputy undersecretary at the U.S. Department of Education, said it would "soak" students who got high-paying jobs after graduation.

He predicted students training to take higher-salaried jobs would refuse to join the program, forcing the federal government to kick in dollars to cover the loan costs of lower-paid students who would never repay all that they owed.

Dukakis aide Thomas Herman was more enthusiastic.

"This is not only feasible, it is desirable," he said. "It will allow everyone who is qualified and wants to go to college, to go to college."

"It is a substantive proposal, one that should be discussed," said Bob Aaron of the National Association of State Universities and Land-Grant Colleges.

"We're extremely pleased that one of the presidential candidates has come forth with a new and imaginative program for college loans for people from all walks of life," said Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

Janet Lieberman of the U.S. Student Association, which represents campus student governments in Washington, D.C., said, "It's a very creative program to help middle-class families, but it doesn't really address the needs of low-income people."

"What low-income people need is grant money," said Dave Merkowitz of the American Council on Education. "They're the least likely to take out loans. Both presidential candidates need to develop plans to address the needs of the neediest."

The Dukakis plan would allow any student, regardless of family income, to get a federally guaranteed student loan and repay it through mandatory payroll deductions during the student's working years for as long as they work, or "buy out" of the program at any time by paying a lump sum.

As a result, graduates who find jobs with high salaries could pay back more than the interest and principal on their loans, while low-income students may never pay back all they borrowed.

"The problem with [Dukakis'] plan . . . is it depends upon people who are likely to make reasonable incomes being willing to get soaked," Carnes said.

Rosser believed the federal government will have to subsidize the program to keep it viable, something Dukakis says won't be necessary, but in the long run would deal "with the student loan default question in a very effective way," thus saving taxpayers millions of dollars.

Because the government would take its payment directly out of graduates' paychecks, the default rate, at least theoretically, would be minimal.

"It's nice that under this plan you can graduate and

"This is not only feasible, it is desirable. It will allow everyone who is qualified and wants to go to college, to go to college."

— Thomas Herman

go into a low-paying job like teaching and nursing and not worry about paying off your loans," Lieberman said. "We appreciate the creativity."

Yale University had a similar loan program for 3,600 students from 1972 to 1978 in which students could borrow a portion of their tuition from the school and begin repaying it after graduation at a rate of .4 percent — $4 per year — for each $1,000 borrowed.

Dukakis' plan, by contrast, would have students repay their loans at a rate of $8 per year for every $1,000 borrowed.

"We still think it's a plausible idea," said Donald Routh, Yale's director of financial aid.

Routh said Yale dropped the idea because it required massive amounts of capital to maintain it. Administrators figured it would take 17 years before payments would reduce the outstanding balance owed to the university.

Yet fears that students anticipating a high income would not participate in such a program were proved not to be true, Routh added.

The Department of Education also has promoted an "income contingent loan" program now being tested at 10 campuses.

In his last two federal college budget proposals, President Reagan asked Congress to replace virtually all Guaranteed Student Loans with income-contingent loans, but Congress, heeding educators' testimonies that it was too early to tell if the idea is workable, opted for a pilot program instead.

Under the Reagan plan, all borrowers would have to repay all the principal and interest they owed in a prescribed time.

Under Dukakis' plan, loan repayments would come directly out of graduates' paychecks, much like their Social Security payments.

Graduates would not have repayments deducted from earnings over a certain cap, probably to be set somewhere between $50,000 and $100,000 a year.

Graduates who borrowed $20,000 to get through college and earned, for example, $20,000 a year would repay the government $500 in a year, or 2.5 percent of their income.

Students would take out the loans, guaranteed by the government, through banks.

Aaron thought it interesting that Dukakis, who has trailed Republican presidential nominee George Bush in the polls since mid-August, unveiled the "substantive" proposal because he thinks it's something the American people want.

But although he commended the Massachusetts governor for developing a program with meat, Aaron feared it will be used against him.

"Things are a little out of hand. The politicians are carped on because they don't offer anything substantial. Then when they offer something substantial, special interest groups come out with complaints about technical minutiae. It all comes down to jealousy. They're jealous because they didn't think of it first."

Graduation change?

The annual question of how to conduct May graduation won't go away. Now the faculty senate wants to tell JMU President Ronald Carrier how to change the improved graduation format he implemented last May.

Last year Carrier decided to change the ceremony from Saturday on the Quad to Sunday at JMU Stadium, he added several events to complement graduation, and set aside more time to spend with family, friends and faculty.

This year the faculty senate wants to make a list of proposals to Carrier, one of which is a possible switch to a Saturday night ceremony.

Why, all of a sudden, does the faculty senate want to tamper with a graduation format that proved successful in May?

If anyone should suggest changes, it is the class of 1989. They are the people graduating, not the faculty, staff or administration.

If some faculty senators are concerned about the number of people who went to the hospital or left because of excessive heat during May's ceremony, then graduation could be held earlier Sunday morning.

The sun will not be as strong earlier in the morning, which would diminish the possibility of people leaving or being overcome by heat. The ceremony would be over around noon so people could have more time to travel home or attend post-graduation activities.

If graduation is moved to Saturday night, what happens to the candlelight/champagne ceremony? The ceremony, hosted by the Carriers, was one of the weekend's most memorable events.

Graduation must be held on Sunday to make it a weekend-long event. A Saturday evening ceremony would burden a day already chock-full of events and activities. The graduation committee last year spent numerous hours carefully planning the event. They specifically decided to designate Saturday as a day to feast and frolic.

The faculty senate would be wise to seek student feedback before making a recommendation on how or if graduation weekend should be changed. After all, the seniors, not the faculty, have been looking forward to this event for four years.

... every issue of the paper presents an opportunity and a duty to say something courageous and true; to rise above the mediocre and conventional; to say something that will command the respect of the intelligent, the educated, the independent part of the community...

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SGA sponsors Speak Out on 1988 presidential election

To the editor:

As the November election approaches, the Student Government Association is working harder than ever to register and inform as many students as possible.

On Monday, October 10th, the SGA will be sponsoring a Speak Out on the WCC Patio from 12 p.m. until 2 p.m. This event will be an opportunity for any interested student to share his or her views on any issue relative to the 1988 presidential election.

The Speak Out will be an excellent time to stand up for the candidate of your choice, argue the merits of a particular platform, or discuss the election process in general. For those who are not speaking, this will be a good time to listen to opposing thoughts from fellow students.

The SGA has 10-minute speaking openings available. I encourage you to call the office (x3797) to reserve a time slot. If you aren't interested in speaking, I invite you to sit on the hill and listen to some fiery exchanges of ideas.

Senatorial elections need to be taken more seriously by SGA

To the editor:

Recently all the dorms on campus went through the annual SGA senate elections. The SGA refers to these contests as minor elections.

Minor elections obviously are not very important to our SGA! Our elected representatives in the SGA control these contests and have never found them important enough to make formal rules or regulations controlling them.

In fact, the SGA senate elections are controlled by one individual, the legislative vice president of the SGA. The legislative vice president has ultimate power concerning all minor election discrepancies and is the sole decision maker if any problems arise.

The United States is a republic with a system of checks and balances that restricts this kind of ultimate power. However, the SGA does not abide by these provisions of the U. S. Constitution.

The SGA senate election in Chandler Hall this fall experiences many problems with the electoral system. Election violations by a candidate occurred but were overlooked, and no action was taken by the SGA to remedy the situation.

Whether these violations were overlooked for personal or professional reasons or the lack of strict rules and regulations is unknown, but they were overlooked!

The SGA let the residents of Chandler Hall and the students of JMU down. Action should have been taken and it was not. This election was not fair and to a point, unconstitutional.

I am writing this letter as a concerned student and a Chandler resident so the proper action will be taken to avoid this situation in the future. The SGA should not let the names of the major and minor elections stereotype their importance.

Only a handful of individuals are elected in the major elections, where almost 50 individuals are elected in the minor elections.

It seems to me that minor elections need to be taken more seriously and I will personally lead the march!

Students learn by exploring what they don't understand

To the editor:

During the 10 years I've been reading The Breeze, I am especially pleased to notice that in the last couple of years the editors have, in the words of Johnathan Aldom's letter of Sept. 22, put "the spotlight of our academic community" on serious campus-life issues: alcoholism, racism, human rights, sex, abortion, AIDS and student health and lifestyles.

Any student will have a more positive college experience by learning as much as possible about these topics. Jacki Hampton's "A Struggle for Acceptance: Portrait of a Homosexual" is one of the very best of these articles.

Halfway through, the story stopped being an interview and took on overtones of literature's Of Human Bondage and Portrait of an Artist as a Young Man.

What makes Rod Sauquillo's story more than a courageous telling of what it's like to be gay is his capacity for self-actualization; transcending just a "sympathy plea" and becoming everyman's search for his true self and — perhaps the more difficult part — acceptance and love for this true self.

There are several levels of information in the article. I sense that Johnathan Aldom read only on the level that Rod Sauquillo does sexual things that Johnathan Aldom does not do. Mr. Aldom closes the door right there.

While a student at JMU there will be pounds and pounds of books to read which have ideas that you will not agree with. The point is to learn to read critically, not judgementally — collecting the wisdom of others different from ourselves.

What precious little we could learn if we only spent time reading what we already understood. By closing doors, one closes the mind to knowledge, staying on a level of self-righteous judgementalism and condemnation.

Ignorance and fear of what you do not have the wisdom to understand are two bedfellows harboring more hate and ungodliness — and are more "disgusting" — than any two homosexuals.

Whatever else one may like or dislike about Rod and Charlie's relationship, it is admirable because it has developed their self-love, too. Anyone who can help teach me this, whether gay or straight, is worth listening to.

Dealing with issues of sexuality provides occasion for dialogue

To the editor:

I am writing in response to the letter of Mr. Aldom and 52 others in the Sept. 22 issue of The Breeze. I found the intolerant and judgemental tone of his letter offensive.

While I respect his conviction that homosexuality is wrong, I believe his personal attack on Mr. Sauquillo offensive and his conviction that his particular view of Christianity is the Christian view presumptuous. There are many within the Christian tradition who do not feel compelled to condemn those who are gay or lesbian.

I applaud The Breeze series on sexuality. In breaking silence on issues of intimacy, an opportunity for dialogue is provided. I believe the best we of the Christian tradition have to contribute to this dialogue is a call for openness and tolerance, an end to all relationships which exploit, and a strong voice for respecting the worth, dignity and value of each person regardless of that person's sexual preference, gender, race or faith.

CARS service being misused, doesn't offer rides to parties

To the editor:

Catch A Ride Safely (CARS) is a program that provides a safe ride home for those who have had too much to drink and are unable to drive.

We offer transportation for people who do not want to ride with a driver who has had too much to drink. The CARS service is free, confidential and open to all JMU students and faculty.

In the past, the CARS service has been misused. Many people have called asking for transportation to parties. We only offer rides home, not to parties.

Each night CARS operates, we experience back-ups, sometimes over a half hour. When people call and then don't show up or ask to be taken to another party, they waste valuable time and money. CARS is not a taxi service and should only be used as alternative transportation.

CARS will operate each Friday and Saturday this semester except for fall break. The hours are from 11 p.m. to 3 a.m. For a safe ride home, call 433-CARS.

Correction

Sven Johnson's letter to the editor in the Sept. 26 issue of The Breeze contained misinformation. The independent committee Johnson referred to is investigating campaign tactics of both Patricia Williams and Johnson, and will determine if the senatorial elections in Chandler Hall Sept. 20 were conducted fairly.

Bill banning genocide faces Congress

Imagine an international treaty prohibiting a government from killing large numbers of its population because of religious beliefs or ethnic background. Then imagine that the U.S. Senate has stalled signing the treaty for 42 years and is still arguing over the finer points of the legislation.

If you go through school long enough, a high school government teacher or college professor is bound to trip over the subject of dynamic tension — the system of checks and balances upon which the American ship of state floats.

"The system works," or so Walter Cronkite said after Nixon doffed his hat and fled back to California. Nobody said the system worked all the time and nobody promised it would work well. Sometimes, the ship of state meanders.

For 19 years, Wisconsin Democrat William Proxmire has steadfastly urged his peers to approve a treaty that first took form in the mind of Harry Truman. It is still no closer to being passed than when he was in office.

Obviously, it is not the crime of genocide that the Senate is having trouble deploring. The bill is a symbol of international abhorrence to mass-murder. No one would suggest that senators, duly elected by their constituents enjoy wasting people (Students for America can put their pens down right now and blank Ted Kennedy from their minds) Like all good lawmakers, they are having problems deciding on a punishment for systematic slaughter; life imprisonment or the death penalty.

Truth is stranger than fiction. One senator's objection is that if approved, the Indians would rise up and sue the United States for alleged improprieties after the Mayflower landed, there being legal precedent.

Objections to the treaty lie mostly in the conservative camp because they want the death penalty. After 19 years of debate, the best and brightest have decreed that the punishment for genocide is life imprisonment.

Surprisingly, of the 97 countries that have ratified the treaty, only 14 require the death penalty. Israel is one of them.

This probably has something to do with the philosophy that "two wrongs don't make a right." It is a fine ideal, and for a law meant essentially as a gesture is quite proper. But after 5.8 million wrongs, nobody is much in the mood to follow niceties to be something of an inbred quality in the Senate; weird, hybrid forms of stupidity (e.g. hemophiliac stupidity — say something stupid once, and the dam breaks. You say and do stupid things for the rest of your term).

At first glance, it would seem the death penalty is the correct solution. Since we can't even strictly define when a ordinary murderer deserves the chair or not to each state's satisfaction, it appears the difficulty in deciding the penalty for genocide has increased a thousand-fold.

"People who are the strongest supporters say they will not support it if it has the death penalty," Proxmire told a New York Times interviewer. And conservatives won't let it pass without one. Nobody is going to pay attention to a law that outrages their morality; hence, abortion clinics are bombed and people assigned to the back of the bus sit up front. So why haggle over what is realistically not important.

Then there are other questions.

Pol Pot of Cambodia was certainly guilty of genocide, but it wasn't the United States that stopped him. It was Vietnam. Does this mean that a country which has not signed can overlook genocide? Is each member of the treaty responsible only for his country. If so, who is going to turn himself in? If not, can we punish those countries that had signed the bill before the Vietnamese invasion for neglecting their obligations. Does it matter if Cambodia signed the treaty or not?

Asking yourself if Hitler would have signed is an equally disturbing question. So don't. Just ask yourself why it takes decades for the U.S. Senate to officially condemn and find a fitting punishment for mass murder on a national scale.

scrawled on a piece of paper. The Israelis certainly weren't when they kidnapped Adolph Eichmann from his South American home to stand trial.

Somewhere a critical mass is reached. If a California man who raped a young girl and then cut off her arms can't settle anywhere for fear of being torn apart by a mob, how compelling is the logic, that says an Eichmann can be maintained alive and at the state's expense.

Stupidity transcends political boundaries and seems

UPS and DOWNS OF RUNNING A DORM

By Karen Saliter
staff writer

It's 3:30 a.m. You're locked out of your room and your roommate is out of town with both sets of keys.

Just a few minutes ago you saw the person you've been scoping all semester dancing intimately with your best friend at a party. Things just get worse as you stomp down the hall, until you pound a cheerfully decorated door and collapse in a heap in front of your resident adviser.

For JMU's staff of resident advisers, helping you out of such situations is an everyday (and night) occurrence — but it's just one part of their job. Their responsibilities include much more than just getting keys, sitting desk, registering parties, and opening storage.

"Your job is meeting people . . . and being a friend," said Jamie Allison, a Huffman Hall resident adviser.

Dean Loher of Weaver Hall agrees, saying that the RA's main role is to relate to residents as a friend.

"We'd like to be a friend and then the RA," Loher said. "That makes the job a lot easier."

But before RAs can even start those jobs and friendships, interested students must pass a rigorous testing and training program. It begins in late November of every year, when short essay applications are given out to interested students.

Applicants who satisfy the 2.0 grade point average requirement are invited to an orientation in January. These candidates then meet in groups of 10 to get acquainted and respond to hypothetical situations they might encounter as RAs.

In the next step of the selection process, each applicant is interviewed by a group of three or four current RA staff members, and then by a member of the administrative staff from the Office of Residence Life.

Candidates are evaluated throughout the process. "I look for people who are excited about being at JMU . . . who enjoy being with others and who want to make the residence halls the best they can possibly be," said Peggy McHugh, associate director of residence life.

Once the decisions have been made, hall directors choose their own RAs and notify them before spring break. An alternate pool also is selected in case replacements become necessary.

Advisers

During fourth block, the new staff members are required to take a course especially designed to prepare them for the upcoming year.

In the fall, the staff must return to JMU a week earlier than other students to participate in a training program, which focuses on promoting team spirit in each residence hall as well as in specific dorm areas on campus, McHugh said.

RAs also must attend four out of 30 special training sessions throughout the academic year. Topics include stress management, eating disorders, motivation and program ideas.

Students who apply for RA positions are interested in a job involving much of interaction with other students. Some say they were influenced greatly by their RAs' positive feedback and enthusiasm.

"I saw what my RAs were doing when I was a freshman, and I really liked it," said Jean Hobler, an Eagle Hall RA. This favorable impression often becomes an incentive for other people to become RAs.

RAs provide programs, activities, advice and counseling that enhance the living and learning environment of the residence hall. These projects "provide a place of community . . . where it feels more like home," said White Hall's

Michael Umbach.

Community life, however, doesn't always run smoothly — RAs often must confront residents who don't adhere to campus policy. "Having to discipline . . . is not my favorite part of the job," Umbach said.

Loher said it's especially difficult for an RA to confront friends. But "your true friends will understand what you are doing," he said.

they are "off-duty" at parties or in other settings.

"I guess people look up to you — you're always seen as an RA," said Maria Anesi of Chandler Hall.

Because they're in a role model position, RAs always have to be careful. "We have to watch ourselves," said Kevin Sandlin of Weaver Hall.

Loher said, "You stay away from parties that are on campus — you don't about it," Umbach said.

An RA may be confronted to give advice, resolve roommate conflicts, discuss relationships, comfort those who are homesick, or counsel residents with drug or alcohol problems, eating disorders or stress. They also might have to refer residents to campus or local resources if the problem needs to be dealt with on a more professional level.

"The upperclassmen, or most of them, have already come to terms with their life at college," Hobler said. "The freshmen are trying to find a niche."

RAs who have freshman residents must help these students deal with the difficult transition from high school to college. Freshmen "rely on their RA a lot more" and usually need more support and encouragement than upperclassmen do, Deyerle said.

RAs with upperclass residents are faced with a different range of problems, such as alcoholism, stress or relationship difficulties, Hobler said.

Anesi said being able to help someone is perhaps the most rewarding aspect of being an RA. "When people come to you, it makes you feel really good about yourself."

Hobler summed up the attitudes most RAs have toward their positions — "this job would not be worth it if it weren't for the people involved."

"Meeting and helping people — I think that's the most important aspect about it."

— Michael Umbach

Friends can't receive special treatment, though. "I'm not going to be unfair," said Cleveland Hall's Jenny Hall. "I've got to do what I've got to do."

When RAs have the respect of their friends and residents, they're not forced to act as a disciplinarian, Hobler said. People will "follow policy because they don't want to let you down."

Another difficulty RAs must face is adhering to campus policies even when want to be a hypocrite."

Always being seen as an RA and having so much pressure and responsibility may seem to be a negative aspect of the job. This role model position, however, can be something very positive because it enables RAs to reach out to students in ways that most other residents are unable to do — helping them deal with their personal lives.

EYE ON THE ARTS

'Generations' premieres at Experimental Theatre

"Generations," a play written by visiting theatre professor Glyn Jones, opened yesterday at the Experimental Theatre in the Wampler building.

The production runs through Sunday and may be extended to Monday. Show time is 8 p.m., and the box office opens at 6 p.m.

The play is set in the Shenandoah Valley and focuses on one day in the life of a dirt-poor family. Its theme is abuse — child abuse, spouse abuse and geriatric abuse.

Junior Edward Christian Holloway is directing the production. Sophomores Janice O'Rourke, Va Hamilton, Jennifer Rayfield and freshman Tracy Y. Lee make up the all-female cast.

When "Generations" opened Wednesday, it made its world premiere — it never has been published or performed for the public before, but Jones plans to publish it soon.

Tickets are $2.50. The play is recommended for mature audiences only.

New Image Gallery announces first semester exhibit schedule

New Image Gallery in Zirkle House will exhibit the works of four nationally recognized photographers this semester.

Sept. 26—Oct. 14 — Charles Swedlund "Cave Series" — In this series, "underground" photographs illuminate monolithic forms reminiscent of Stonehenge.

Oct. 17—Nov. 4 — Richard Gray "Manipulated Landscapes" — Gray presents an exhibition of collaged photographs that challenges viewers' perceptions of the landscape through his inventive large-scale reconstructions.

Nov. 7—23 — Ardine Nelson "When Alice was Just 3 Inches Tall" — Nelson explored her garden through the vantage point of an Alice in Wonderland by using pinhole cameras.

Nov. 30—Dec. 16 — Peter Feldstein "Variations/Recent Works in Cibachrome and Cliche-Verre" — The exhibit includes 10 Ciba chrome prints and 10 recent black and white cliche-verre images.

Cavaliers cook Dukes, 2-0

By Matt Wasniewski
staff writer

The Dukes came into Wednesday night's soccer match against Virginia with nothing to lose and everything to gain.

Playing the number two-ranked team in the nation close was all the Dukes wanted to accomplish. That they did, but ended up falling to the Cavaliers 2-0.

UVA upped its record to 7-0-2 while the Dukes fell to 8-2-0.

Virginia struck first with 20:07 remaining in the first half. UVA midfielder Jeff Argos headed a Jeff Byrum cross-pass into the left side of the net. However, Virginia squandered several scoring opportunities in the first half.

"We were a little bit intimidated by the UVA mystique," said JMU head coach Tom Martin. "The most alarming thing was we allowed them to score a goal on exactly what we rehearsed in practice. We let them penetrate out of the back and down the middle."

The Dukes, cheered on by many JMU fans, mounted a serious scoring threat late in the first half. With 2:08 remaining, the Dukes halted a Cavalier offensive drive. Chris Simon found Ricky Englefried on an upfield breakaway. Englefried, pursued by two UVA defenders, managed to get the ball within 20 yards of the goal, but couldn't get a shot off. Simon, trailing the play, took a shot that bounced off a UVA defender 10 yards in front of the Cavalier goal.

Virginia upped the score to 2-0 with 11:09 remaining in the game on a controversial goal by forward Lyle Yorks.

"There were three real questionable calls in my mind," Martin said. "The second goal was definitely offsides. The guy was standing on the two-yard line and the ball was played forward to him. I can still score at my age from there. There was some home cooking in my opinion from the officials; otherwise, we'd still be playing."

With 3:30 remaining, JMU's Jimmy Zepp knocked a corner kick that Englefried headed towards the right corner of the goal. UVA goalie Mark Wayland managed to tip the ball over the top of the net.

The loss marked the first time this season the Dukes were shut out. However, JMU managed to outshoot the Cavaliers 10-9 and create three corner kicks while yielding three.

Patience, players 'key' freshmen

By Stephanie Swalm
assistant sports editor

Second in a series

It's been a long time since Ben Lawrynas saw action in a football game. And it will probably be springtime before he does again.

Lawrynas, a freshman offensive lineman for the Dukes, most likely will be red-shirted this season. During preseason, his coaches had said if a few starters were injured, he might be called into service.

But JMU has played four times since then and Lawrynas' first collegiate start looks like it will be farther away than this season. He's still practicing and working out with the team every day, but he's facing the fact it will be a while before he takes the field in a game situation.

"I'm still trying to learn what I'm doing. I'm starting to get it all down . . ."

—B. Lawrynas

strange that Carlson "has the key."

"A key to practice," he explains. "He always has something. Like it might be raining outside and I'm like 'D.R., what's the key?' And he'll say something like, 'the key is it's raining—it's not hot.' It sounds stupid when you start thinking about it, but it makes sense," Lawrynas said.

While the antics of certain football players keep him entertained, Lawrynas also is using his time on the sidelines to learn from his peers. He's still trying to master the complicated Winged-T offense, but he says he's slowly getting the hang of it.

"I'm still trying to learn what I'm doing. I'm starting to get it all down, I'm just trying to forget everything else [learned in high school]," Lawrynas said.

Practice sees him on the third team, which he describes as not quite the scrub team, but "a happy medium." Lawrynas says he realizes somebody has to be there for the first and second teams to practice against, but he is looking forward to the day when he'll be the one playing against the newcomers.

"Somebody has to do it," he said. "Then hopefully next year there will be a new crop of freshmen for us to practice on."

But, he admits, there are some advantages to sitting out during your first year. He echoes head coach Joe Purzycki's attitude about red-shirting.

"I'd rather be doing [learning the system] in practice than on the field somewhere; I'd rather be screwing up in practice than on the field where it counts," he said.

Whether it's during practice or a game, Lawrynas has found himself learning by observation.

"I just watch. I try to watch what the other players are doing. Lance Doty and Chris Schellhammer are in front of me, and they're really good technicians. I just watch them a lot and try to pick up some of their stuff," he said.

Lawrynas' first playing time may come in the spring, when the team participates in spring practice and has its annual intrasquad scrimmage. For now, that's one thing giving the freshmen motivation.

"My real season starts in the spring with spring ball," he said. "The rest of the time I just try to keep moving up."

"I think [the freshmen are] all dealing with it pretty much the same way I am," Lawrynas said. "We're all getting red-shirted so all we're doing is trying to get ready for spring ball, help the team out as much as possible now. Hopefully, we'll move up."

Lawrynas even may be sidelined from practice for a while. He suffered a sprained knee in practice this week, but said that he hopes to be back on track soon.

For Saturday's game against Liberty, the freshman will be making his contribution to the team. But as he's learned, his presence on the sidelines is as important to the future of JMU football as the starters are to the present.

So what motivates a player day after day, when he knows that come Saturday, he'll be pacing the sidelines?

For Lawrynas and most of the other red-shirt freshmen, it's the future. They have started to look past the everyday drudgery of practice, to the days when they will be the ones on the field.

Lawrynas is relying on older players who know the frustration that comes with being a red-shirt freshman to make it easier for him.

"A lot of the guys help me out, like D.R. Carlson [starting left tackle for JMU]," Lawrynas said. "Before practice he always helps me out. He always has a key."

A key? Lawrynas laughs and talks as if it's nothing

Rugby club wins 2 of 3

The JMU men's rugby club took two of three games from George Mason Saturday in Fairfax.

The A-side lost its first contest of the season with a narrow 12-11 loss. Scoring from the club were Rob Huebeck and John Galiani.

The B-side and C-side teams each recorded shutouts in their wins. The B-side triumphed 6-0, while the C-side won 3-0.

Dukes rally, but lose 3-2

The JMU field hockey team suffered another disappointing loss Wednesday as the Dukes came up on the short end of a 3-2 decision to Virginia in Charlottesville.

The score was tied at 0-0 after the first half, but the Cavaliers soon broke the deadlock with a pair of goals early in the second period.

JMU battled back on Amy Hicks' goal, with an assist from Laurie Roselli to close the gap to 2-1, but UVa. countered with its third goal of the game to make the score 3-1.

Kerry Nadwodny, off an assist from Hicks, pulled the Dukes to within one at 3-2 with just under five minutes left to play. But JMU could score no more as the Cavaliers upped their record to 4-4, while JMU fell to 3-2-1.

Brandt, Baker reach semis

JMU's Jennifer Brandt and Stephanie Baker reached the semifinals in their singles flight tournaments this weekend in the SUnityLife Classic at Syracuse University.

Brandt, playing in the flight five singles, defeated Penn State's Jody Carson 6-3, 7-5, and N.A. Acacio of South Carolina 3-6, 2-1 retired, before losing in the semifinals to Boston College's Regina Fagin 6-1, 6-1. Brandt claimed second place by beating Michelle McKeen of Virginia 6-2, 6-3.

After a surprising opening round upset of second-seeded Diane Hagarth of Texas A&M 6-3, 6-2, Baker continued to roll by crushing Boston University's Cathy Mape 6-0, 6-2 to cruise into the semifinals, where she succumbed to Harvard's Jennifer Minkus 6-1, 3-6, 6-4. Baker then fell to Boston College's Rosalyn Chua 6-4, 6-1 in the third-place match.

It was an especially tough week for the Breeze sports editors, as Dave Washburn and Stephanie Swaim went a dismal 3-7 and 4-6, respectively. Guest predictor Chris Simmons, sports editor of the Daily News-Record, tied Washburn. This week, JMU athletic director Dean Ehlers will try his luck as he becomes the guest predictor.

JMU will try to recover from its rain-soaked 10-3 loss Saturday against William and Mary when Liberty

University comes to town for a meeting between two Division I-AA Independents.

The Dukes will be looking to defeat the Flames for the first time in coach
Joe Purzycki's four years as head coach.
JMU lost at home to Liberty 9-3 in 1985 and 17-7 in Lynchburg the following year.

The 1988 campaign marks the first time Liberty has competed at the I-AA level, making the switch from Division II. It has been a smooth transition thus far as Liberty currently boasts a 3-1 record, including a sound 34-9 victory over Morehead State Saturday. The Flames rolled up 362 yards in total offense, while limiting the Eagles to 188 yards.

Liberty lost only six starters from last season and are expected to start five seniors and 10 juniors against the Dukes.

On offense, the Flames rely on quarterback Paul Johnson and running back Charles McCray to pace the attack. The 6-foot-2 junior Johnson threw for 122 yards and a touchdown in Liberty's win against Morehead State.

Though not listed as a starter,
McCray has seen considerable playing time at the tailback position, rushing for 87 yards and three touchdowns last week.

The Liberty defense is a stingy one, limiting the Eagles to just six yards rushing and seven total first downs. The defense also has produced several turnovers, including four interceptions against Tennessee Tech three weeks ago and two against Morehead State.

For JMU to win, Roger Waters must return to form. The sophomore completed just two of 10 passes against the Tribe last week in a game hindered by heavy downpours.

Shoppers commit 'crime of want' when they steal

Editor's Note: Due to the sensitive nature of the story, Ann's name has been changed.

By Laurel Wissinger
assistant business editor

Ann glanced nervously around the store, waiting for the elderly woman comparing fake emerald earrings to leave. The saleswoman's back was to the counter, and Ann's careful inspection of the ceiling and wall revealed no security cameras.

"I kept thinking, 'I can do this, I can get away with this,'" said Ann, a 19-year-old JMU sophomore. "All of a sudden, that ugly gold necklace was the most important thing in my life. I had to have it."

The elderly lady wandered off, deciding the green earrings didn't suit her tastes after all. Ann seized the opportunity, stuffing the necklace into her jeans pockets.

"I thought since no one jumped out from behind a mannequin and yelled, 'Stop, thief!' that I was in the clear," Ann said. "I just walked through the store casually, stopping to look at a scarf and a pair of shoes as I made my way to the door."

Ann was halfway through to exit when a man laid his hand on her shoulder. "Excuse me miss, would you mind coming with me?"

Ann, like a half million others each year, was caught shoplifting.

Retailers across the country are fighting what the National Retail Merchants Association has called a "$1.5 billion dilemma." Shoplifters account for almost the same increase in prices as inflation, according to the association.

"It's a sick, vicious circle," said psychologist Beth Milwed in the September 1988 issue of Mademoiselle magazine. "The more prices are marked up to account for losses, the more people are inclined to say, 'it's a big store, they charge too much anyways, and therefore I'm simply going to take it.'"

Staff graphic by PAUL ARNSBERGER

Shoplifting is not limited to big cities and poor individuals, two myths commonly held about the crime. Items most frequently lifted are not considered necessities, and "virtually all" of those apprehended had the money to pay for the stolen item, Milwed said.

"[Shoplifting] is not a crime of survival," she said. "It's a crime of want. We live in a very materialistic society, one where people are judged according to their possessions."

"I call it the 'Whoever has the most things when he dies, wins' mentality. People are not shoplifting $500 suits because they're cold or filet mignon because they're starving," Milwed said.

The recent winner of the Miss Minnesota crown was forced to resign after it was revealed she had been convicted on a shoplifting charge. Her successor held the title for exactly two weeks, until she too was exposed as having stolen a $50 blouse from a Minneapolis department store last year.

Even a small city such as Harrisonburg has its share of the crime, according to several local merchants.

"[Shoplifting] accounts for 30 to 50 percent of our losses," said a security force member at Leggett.

Those losses to the store in turn become mark-ups for the consumer.

"Customers pay about one to two cents of every dollar towards making up what shoplifters have stolen," said Roses' manager Jim Serba.

Michelle Kane, manager of the Lock Stock and Barrel gift shop, agrees shoplifters are a problem, especially in a store such as hers that carries a wide selection of small items.

"Anything small and desirable is an easy target for a shoplifter," she said. "Stuffed animals, picture frames, they're all easily swiped."

Kane recently had to install an airport-style metal detector at the entrance of the store in response to theft.

"We had a choice, either to raise prices or to put in the system. In this case it came down to spending money now rather than losing it later," she said.

Concealing an item and then walking out of the store with it is the method most often used by shoplifters. In its

IABC: getting ahead in the job search

By Amanda Benson
business editor

Students looking for a mere line on their resumes might end up with much more if they join IABC.

The International Association of Business Communicators offers internships, externships and networking resources to help students look for jobs.

"Some people do join just to add a line to their resume, which is fine," said Dr. Mae Frantz, adviser to IABC. "But those who get the most out of the program are active members."

JMU IABC members also receive 10 issues of Communication World magazine, a monthly newsletter, a world directory of members and a job hotline number.

The externship program offered by IABC involves "shadowing" a professional on the job site for a day, Frantz said. The student observes planning and production as well as client feedback, a process that can be a "major benefit" in understanding the professional world.

IABC/JMU sponsors several speakers, conferences and professional meetings each year to give members insight and contacts in the business world.

"We frequently bring in big-name people, so there is a definite educational purpose," Frantz said.

Founded in 1981, IABC/JMU's biggest accomplishment was holding the organization's first student chapter conference in March. More than 100 students from various student chapters attended the event.

In 1983, the JMU chapter won the Student Chapter of the Year award.

Shoplift

simplest form, concealment can range from trying on a shirt and putting other clothing on top of it to placing a scarf in a shopping bag.

But shoplifters have come up with some more complex variations of the method, Serba said.

Any large package or purchase is automatically suspect at the checkout counter because of how easily smaller items can be placed within the wrappings, he said. "I once had a customer place four or five dozen golf balls inside of a toy package."

Another ploy Serba has encountered is the "folded towel trick." Small items are tucked away inside of a towel or blanket, where they can slip by undetected by a cashier.

Cashiers at Roses are trained to be on the lookout for questionable merchandise coming through their lines, Serba said. "If a package is unusually heavy, or the edges aren't taped shut, they inspect it closely."

Electronic items that can't be locked up, such as telephones and portable cassette players, are often targets of those with sticky fingers, Serba said.

K-Mart subscribes to the "prevention before prosecution" philosophy concerning shoplifting. All employees view videotapes on shoplifting techniques and make a point of being particularly visible in the store, said manager Don Jarrels.

"If we see a person acting suspiciously, like standing in one place for a long time, a salesperson will go up and ask if there's anything they can help him with," Jarrels said.

"If a potential shoplifter knows that someone has his eye on him, maybe it will scare him away.

"We like to prevent [shoplifting]. That's worth more to me than throwing somebody in jail," Jarrels said.

One trend Jarrels has noticed is "team shoplifting," where two or more thieves work together. The first shoplifter loads a shopping cart with merchandise and leaves it in an obscure corner of the store, where a second partner subsequently comes along and lifts the items.

Because children are less likely to be prosecuted, Jarrels said, some of the more sophisticated shoplifters have employed unsuspecting children to aid them in their crime.

A shoplifter parks a shopping cart near the entrance, and then offers a dollar to a youngster willing to push it out the door. If the child isn't stopped, the thief takes the merchandise once it's outside. The shoplifter simply disappears if a store employee questions the child.

A Leggett spokesperson said small accessories were most often stolen, but sometimes the sheer boldness of a shoplifter allows success in making off with larger items.

"Our store doesn't have a rug department, but in some that do they've had people walk right out of the store with carpets," she said. "It takes audacity to do something like that.

"You would always stop someone leaving the store with a sweater, but a huge rug?"

For those who do get caught, the penalties can be stiff. Shoplifting is a first class misdemeanor in the state of Virginia, punishable by a year in prison, a $1,000 fine, or both. And most stores don't let perpetrators get away with simply a warning.

"We prosecute in all cases," said the Leggett's spokesperson. "No one is an exception."

Serba said Roses' policy is the same. "Any time we catch somebody and they're going out the door, we prosecute them," he said. "You have to use some discretion, though, because a four-year-old child may not know what he's doing."

As a rule, those caught shoplifting in K-Mart are turned over to the police. "There are exceptions," Jarrels said. "Sometimes people standing in the checkout line pick up a pack of gum or a candy bar, and eat it without thinking about what they're doing.

"For something like that, we're not going to call in the police and throw them in jail."

In Ann's case, however, the store she was caught stealing from didn't compromise when it came to shoplifting.

"I was caught by a camera hidden in a ceiling panel, one that I never would have noticed," Ann said. "The person watching the monitors alerted a floor detective about me on a walkie-talkie." The detective followed her to the door.

Once apprehended, Ann felt like a common criminal.

"The whole experience was humiliating," she said. "It wasn't like a movie, where they shine a bright light in your face until you break down and confess. The detective simply said 'empty your pockets.'

"When I pulled the necklace out, he asked me if I had a receipt for it. Since I didn't, he told me I was guilty of shoplifting."

The store called her parents and the police. Ann was taken to the police station, where she was photographed and fingerprinted.

In court a month later, Ann was found guilty of petty larceny. "I was fined $100 and not allowed in the store for six months.

"I now make sure I have paid for everything I leave a store with."

"We got all kinds of praise for doing such a professional job," Frantz said. "It was a feather in our cap."

Today, JMU has the largest chapter of the international organization. It is mainly composed of communication majors, but any student enrolled at JMU can become a member.

Frantz said one goal of IABC/JMU is to attract younger members.

"The sooner you get involved, the greater confidence you have in your career plans," she said. "You have more chance for leadership."

"It's natural to come in as a freshman and not know what to do, not become involved," Frantz added. "But I'd like to tell everyone to get involved soon — make an impact on the organization and your future life."

Joining the JMU chapter of IABC will provide members with recognition when they seek jobs, Frantz said. In the past five years, about 95 percent of IABC/JMU officers and leaders have been placed in the job market within a year of graduation.

"It says to an employer, 'I cared enough about my career to join a professional organization,'" she said. "Just as the fame of JMU is spreading, so is the positive image of IABC."

This "positive image" only can be achieved if there are active members of the organization, Frantz said. "A major goal this year is to increase active participation and make each member feel he or she has taken ownership of the organization."

There are 70 members of IABC/JMU so far this year.

Senior Randy Blanchetti, president of IABC/JMU, said the organization "provides a connection between the education preparation [students] receive in class and their professional future."

"We've got a good reputation throughout the nation," Blanchetti said.

Members of IABC "become your peers," he said. "All the people involved in it right now will be network resources when we become professionals."

Blanchetti worked as an intern for university advancement at JMU this summer. "I got the idea by attending an IABC seminar," he said.

Jennifer Kornegay, secretary, said IABC helps all academic levels.

"If you're a freshman or a sophomore, it helps you get involved in an organization and meet people," Kornegay said. "If you're career-oriented, it helps you decide what you can do in the future."

Listing membership in IABC on a resume "looks great, not just that you're in it but that you helped plan events," she added.

Phuong Huynh, director of the externship program for IABC, said, "Networking is the key thing you get from IABC."

She explained that while business majors at JMU have campus recruiters come to them, communication majors usually have to "find their own."

"If I weren't in IABC, I wouldn't know where to meet people to get jobs," Huynh said.

She is planning to attend an IABC conference in Pittsburgh during Fall Break. "I'll get to network with professional people there," she said.

NEWS & NOTES

Soft drink company to test mini drink machine

The age-old coffee pot and water cooler in the company break room will soon have a new rival.

BreakMate, a microwave-sized fountain dispenser, is being test-marketed by the Coca-Cola Co. for placement in offices around the country. The machines have room to hold three Coca-Cola brands, and are as simple for employees to use as a coffee machine.

Coca-Cola decided to tackle the corporate market after consumer surveys showed a decrease in coffee consumption over the last several years. Other caffeinated drinks have enticed coffee drinkers, Coca-Cola officials say.

Maker of spoof cards sued

American Express wishes he'd leave his ideas at home.

The credit card company is so mad at Rick Singer, creator of the Poligag Company's "American Excess Card" that they're taking the former defense contractor to court for copyright infringement.

Singer, who also sells a (Hasta La) Vista Card and a WasterCard, take-offs on two other national credit cards, sees his creations as a protest of the $1 trillion budget.

"I'm not making fun of the companies," Singer said. "I'm making fun of the government."
